

FINANCE AND TREASURY TRAINING

Bank Risk Management

5 day course

Classroom, online or in-house

Course overview

A bank fails through its balance sheet, and almost always through a risk somebody had measured and nobody had acted on. This course covers the risk disciplines a bank runs on and how they connect. Delegates work through credit, market, liquidity, interest rate and operational risk, the measurement approach used for each, and the governance that turns a measurement into a decision. Capital adequacy and the regulatory framework are covered alongside stress testing and the risk appetite statement that is supposed to bind the board. Substantial attention goes to the failure pattern behind most banking losses, which is concentration nobody aggregated and a limit somebody kept approving exceptions to.

What you will learn

- Distinguish credit, market, liquidity, interest rate and operational risk and how each is measured
- Assess capital adequacy against the regulatory framework
- Build and interpret a risk appetite statement that constrains real decisions
- Design stress tests that examine the exposures a bank actually holds
- Aggregate concentration across portfolios, counterparties and sectors
- Evaluate the governance that turns a risk measurement into an action
- Report the risk profile to a board and a regulator

Who should attend

- Bank risk managers and analysts
- Credit, treasury and market risk staff
- Internal auditors in financial services
- Regulators and supervisors
- Finance and executive staff in banking
